Roping Division

The Roping Division features the best female ropers in the WPRA competing in team roping (header and heeler), tie-down roping and breakaway roping. World titles are awarded in each division as well as in the all-around category in which a competitor competes in more than one event winning more money than the rest of the field.

Sporting a small but loyal membership (that is currently growing in numbers and events), the women of the Roping Division have the opportunity to compete at events all over the United States in search of a world title.

Standings, based on money won at the approved and co-approved events, are kept just like they are in the barrel racing division. At the end of the year, the WPRA hosts a World Finals featuring top competitors from each of the roping events that gives each competitor one last chance to win enough money to capture a world title.

This section features the 2010 World Champions as well as listings of past champions not only in the roping events but in the roughstock events of bareback riding and bull riding, when that was offered through the WPRA.

Hobbs doubles up with 2010 All-Around and Tie Down Roping World Titles

by Jolee Lautaret

It's hard to imagine that there is anything in the world of roping that Jackie Hobbs has not accomplished. The Abilene, Texas cowgirl recently roped her way to the WPRA

All-Around and Tie Down Roping World Championships, her third straight such titles in just four years as a WPRA member.

But the hallmark of great champions is the drive to always do more.

"I still want to win the Windy Ryon in the breakaway (she won the team roping in 2010), the Reno Rodeo Invitational Ladies Only Roping, US CRA Finals in the tie down and Joe's Boot Shop tie down roping," she says. "A World Series Finals roping, hopefully this year. The Wildfire Open to the World All-Girl roping, and so much more.

"So I have a lot to work towards for a while!"

Hobbs etched her name into WPRA history at the World Finals Rodeo held in Lincoln, Neb., October 13-17, 2010. Competing in all four roping events—tie down, breakaway, heading, and heeling—Hobbs earned just over $8K for the week to claim her third All-Around World Championships, tying her with Rhonda Harrison and Betty Gayle Cooper for fourth all time.

"The All-Around is always my favorite," Hobbs says when asked to rank the many wins in her career which include college championships as well as pro titles. "I guess because I look up to the guys that achieve that award so much. I love to be able to be at the top in multiple events."

That was clearly evident in Lincoln. Hobbs dominated the competition in her signature event, the tie down roping. After splitting third in the opening round, Hobbs stormed back for three straight round wins, resulting in a fourth straight average victory. She bested the field by over a minute, an eternity in the arena. Hobbs banked $2,221 to storm to the World title. Colorado's Krista Johnson claimed the reserve championship some $3,700 behind Hobbs.

"It was very special," says Hobbs, "my mom and grandpa came. They don't get to see me much, so it was a good time."

In the breakaway roping, one of the most hotly contested of the events, Hobbs roped a second place finish in the first round and split the round win in the third go. She finished third in the average, collecting $1,800 for the week. She finished third in the final world standings, barely $400 behind World Champion Lari Dee Guy.

Hobbs and Guy have spent many hours roping against one another and many more roping together. Hobbs has worked for the Guy Ranch for many years, training and selling top quality rope horses. The pair also travel the world teaching others to rope.

Does it ever get tough for the friends who work side by side every day on the ranch and haul together to be competitors in the arena with championships on the line?

"No way!" Hobbs is adamant. "If both of us aren't doing good, then we are doing something wrong somewhere. If I had to have someone pushing me, I would want it to be the person teaching me."

It helps when the friends are helping each other win a bunch as well. Hobbs heads for Guy and the pair roped their way to the World Finals average title in 2010. They were never lower than sixth in a round and collected $2,400 a piece. Guy won a second world title while Hobbs finished eighth in the final heading standings.

It seems that Hobbs had a hand in every title won in the roping pen in Lincoln. She heeled behind Barrie Smith, the 2010 World Champion Header. Together, they roped the opening round victory and a fifth in the final go to finish second in the average. Their winnings totaled $1,649 each, landing Hobbs second to Guy in the heeling standings.

"They are the best!" Hobbs says of her partners, with whom she ropes at most of the big events during the season. "Barrie Smith is probably the winningest women's header ever. Lari Dee Guy is one of the greatest girl heelers ever. What more could you ask for?"

"I love it when any of my friends do good," Hobbs says of the fact that the lion's share of roping money went home in her rig. "It is especially good when one of the girls that we rope with every day or each other does good. I guess because we all work very hard every day to achieve things in the roping pen, so when one of us wins, it's like we all won."

Smith and Guy Capture Their First WPRA Team Roping Titles

by Ted Harbin

There's a lot of truth to strength in numbers. For Lari Dee Guy and Barrie Smith, it takes on a special meaning that led them to their first WPRA world championships. Yes, it's a team roper's reality, where partners not only are part of the equation but also a key reason titles are won.

"I think when you have good partners, then you're more comfortable," said Smith of Stephenville, Texas, the 2010 heading world champion. "When you're comfortable, you rope better. It's just a nice benefit."

Guy, another veteran who also won the breakaway roping world title, also credited her strong season to the help of her friends and her partners. While heeling for Smith was great, she also roped with Jackie Hobbs and Se'Vette Early – Hobbs a multiple time all-around champion, and Early won the 2009 heading championship.

“We rope together at all these events, and we rope well together,” Guy said. “They’re all great, and they make my job easy.”

Team roping allows for multiple entries, so that enables Smith to rope with Guy, Hobbs and her daughter-in-law, Tibba Smith, at a single event. It’s more chance at the money, and it pays pretty well. At the Windy Ryon Memorial No. 11 Ladies roping, Barrie Smith won the average with Hobbs, finished second with Tibba Smith and eighth with Guy. In all, she won $27,394 in Saginaw, Texas, that weekend.

“It’s been easy, because we’ve kept roping together at these events,” Barrie Smith said. “When it goes three times, you have all three partners. When it goes twice is when it gets tough. Then you have to draw to see who ropes with who.”

Early Statements

Smith and Guy had clinched their world titles before the WPRA World Finals began, but that competitive nature – and that family mentality – busted through early in Lincoln, Neb.

Smith teamed with Hobbs to win the opening go-round with an 8.4-second run. They earned $556 each. With Hobbs heading for Guy, that tandem posted a 23.3, which moved them into sixth place in the round and earned them $96 apiece. The next round, though, Hobbs and Guy busted through with the fastest run of the week, a 7.1, for the top round prize.

“With Barrie, you never feel any pressure, so you’re totally focused on what you’re doing,” Hobbs said. “You’re just out there having fun with Barry, and that makes it so much easier.

“Lari Dee is out for everybody. There’s nobody she won’t help. If you need help, she will help you, no matter who you are or what you are.”

Hobbs and Guy won the average title, roping four steers in 53.2 seconds. They also earned money each time they roped together. Smith and Hobbs finished out of the average together, but they added a fifth-place finish in the second go-round.

“I think when you have good partners, then you’re comfortable,” Smith said.

And having good friends is just a great benefit.

“Barrie and I talked about it, because we won it together,” said Guy, noting that both veteran ropers added their first WPRA team roping world titles in 2010. “It meant a lot to be able to win it.

“When I was younger – I’m just a few years younger than Barrie – she was one of the women I looked up to. It was very neat to be able to win it with her.”

Friendship Benefits

Rodeo folks are a family, and it’s more prominent in the Women’s Professional Rodeo Association. The women rope together. They also share fellowship and fun.

“Barrie and I are really good friends,” said Jacque Woolman, who made a run at the 2010 heading world title with a strong season. “Sometimes when you compete against each other, there’s a little bit of animosity, but there isn’t any of that with Barrie. We have the same kind of principles and the same work ethic.

“I’m really proud of her. I respect her ability and what she’s done and sacrificed. She works hard at it. I think she’s really cool and calm and doesn’t let the pressure affect her. She just does what she needs to do. You never see a different side of her. She’s happy no matter what.”

That kind of respect typically is passed around. Each has her own personality, and everyone understands the strengths that tie the binds together. Friendships, true friendships, last through the ups and downs life’s roller coaster provides.

But respect doesn’t always translate into affection. That’s not necessarily the case in this particular piece of the roping community.

“I think Lari Dee is an amazing horsewoman,” Hobbs said. “I think she tries and works at it very hard. A lot of people don’t know that Lari Dee is actually left-handed, and she learned how to rope right-handed. She’s had to break everything down and work at it.”

That’s not just a great story, but also a testament to the work it takes to be great.

“What’s great about Lari Dee is just her horsemanship and her ability,” Woolman said. “She’s always been the one that didn’t rope like a girl. When you talk about roping, Lari Dee’s it, whether it’s breakaway, heading or heeling. She trained horses for pro calf ropers. That’s pretty amazing.

“She’s a good horse trainer and a good person. She’s a good teacher. She and Jackie are going all over the world doing schools and clinics. They’ve always been nice to me and welcomed me into the group with open arms.”

Individual expectations are high, which is a key to being great athletes. But roping is more of a lifestyle, and everyone involved knows how labor intensive it is. Passion is what drives them.

“Since I was a little kid, it’s what I wanted to do when I grew up,” Guy said. “I wanted to rope, and I always competed with my brother. Anything he could do, I wanted to do it better. Once I got older, I decided that’s what I was going to do. I’m pretty headstrong, so when I put my mind on something, I just want to get it done.”

Guy Adds 2010 Breakaway World Title to Resume

by Ted Harbin

Roping veterans know the biggest asset an athlete has is that five inches between the ears.

At the Women’s Professional Rodeo Association World Finals, Lari Dee Guy used her tremendous athleticism, work ethic and years of experience to win the breakaway roping average title to secure the world championship, her second of the 2010 season – the Abilene, Texas, cowgirl also won the heeling average and world titles.

“I didn’t draw very good, so I just made sure I got them all caught,” Guy said. “I like a four-header. The more calves are better for me. I’m more of an average roper than I am anything.

“I think I did have an age advantage.”

The last comment was as much comedy as it was reality, but she has a point. And the years in the saddle were a bonus at Lincoln, Neb., in October.

“The calves were really tough for everybody,” said Guy, who finished atop the four go-rounds in a cumulative time of 15.5 seconds.

It wasn’t a blistering pace, but sometimes trying to be overwhelmingly fast can cause dramatic mistakes. Guy finished nine-tenths of a second ahead of Erin Johnson, who earned the runner-up spot in the average race. All-around champion Jackie Hobbs was third in the average but well off the first two ladies’ times – Hobbs finished in 41.2 seconds, followed by Jenna Lee Hays in 41.9.

“Erin Johnson roped great,” Guy said. “She drew some really bad calves, but she roped tough. But she always ropes tough.”

Guy ended the competition by winning the fourth go-round with a methodical 3.3-second run; to better understand, her 3.1 in the third round was only good enough for third-place money. Krista Johnson and Hobbs split the round win with 2.8s.

Meanwhile, Rachele Holt scored the fastest run of the week with a 2.4, which won the opening round. Keylie Tatum's 2.6 won the second round.

But champions find a way to make it work, or are willed to such, it seems.

"The very last calf just fell in my lap," Guy said. "It was the best calf I drew all week. It came down to where I had to win the last round and the average to win the year-end."

Some ladies might feel the pressure in such a situation, but it's not the first time Guy's been there.

"Up there this year, it was a little tougher situation," she said. "The calves were tough, but you just had to score good. You needed to be on a really good horse, and you needed to rope good. I tried to do all of the above, and I think it paid off."

It seems pretty simple, but when you consider all the factors that go into making a good roping run, it's probably the best method. Of course, the initial "good" in her commentary had to do with the horse, something Guy knows better than most. For a long time, she's been considered one of the top horsewomen.

And it looks like it was a major stepping stone in the championship, where she rode Sooner, a horse, strangely enough, that was raised in Nebraska.

"I think he was raised to be a barrel horse," Guy said of Sooner, which she's had for seven years. "Some people went to make him a roping horse, and that's how I got him. He's been a really good horse for me for a long time.

"When I got him, I wasn't confident in him at all. He was just one that I bought because I was hard-headed. He had a lot of good qualities, and I hoped maybe I could get it out of him. But he did a lot of things I didn't like in a horse."

She stepped outside of her comfort zone and took a chance. Looks like it paid off pretty well.
